Mother and son clear TNPSC exam

From enduring a difficult delivery to raising a child with low vision and mild mental retardation, Sridevi M's journey over the last 19 years is best described as a roller-coaster ride. With a positive outlook on life, she continues unharmed by the outrageous slings of life.

After Mathesh had spent two years in a special school, his parents moved him to a Greater Chennai Corporation-run school in Thiru-Vi-Ka Nagar where the support offered by the Sarva Shiksha Abhiyan staff played a big role in his development.

"In the initial years, I would take permission to sit in the class along with my son and other children to observe the teacher. I would repeat the instructions for him," says Sridevi.

During that time, the State Government ran a programme to help parents of special children become special educators and Sridevi got herself enrolled in it.

"As part of an intervention programme, we were expected to visit the homes of special children that were not attending school and conduct activities like storytelling or helping the students perform an exercise or offer counselling to parents," says Sridevi, a graduate who wears many hats as tailor, embroidery expert and beautician.

This marked her first big exposure to the outside world and at the same time, she was working on helping her child make the most of the inclusive environment at school.

This further motivated Sridevi to pursue a course in B.Ed

(Special Education). Sridevi worked with a private clinic for some years, a job she quit during the pandemic.

"Just because you are a special mom does not mean you have to sacrifice your entire life. One needs to make room for opportunities to make life more meaningful," says the mother of two who has encouraged many women to pursue a hobby or pick up new skills to be financially independent. Many a time, she would take her children along to work and ensure they were also engaged in the process. "These are some conditions I had made before taking up work," she says.

Mathesh Nineteen years old now, Mathesh is in the first year of a bachelors programme in business application. In the recent Group IV examination conducted by the Tamil Nadu Public Service Commission, he secured the 13th rank under the intellectual disability category.

He has taken the exam with the help of a scribe. He has a few more rounds to clear to be finally selected. If he is taking up this examination, it is due to the hard work put in by both mother and son.

As Mathesh cannot read and write, his mother helps him with his lessons.

"Every day, he listens to the news on television," says Sridevi, adding that with his razor-sharp memory, he retains the information very well.

Sridevi also wrote the TNPSC examination as she wanted to know what it is like. She says, "I am a very satisfied mom and it is because of Mathesh. I have also learnt so much."

A mom grows with her children

V Jayanthi takes pride in introducing her two sons with special needs. While 17-year-old Ashwin is visually-challenged and on the spectrum, Prataphi, who is a year younger, has been diagnosed with intellectual disability and hyperactivity. With her children having different forms of disabilities, Jayanthi cannot step out until her husband, who works with a private company, is home.

Jayanthi says her children have challenged and changed her as a mother. The family moved from Villupuram to
